GUIDE TO INDIAN AGENCIES IN BRITISH COLUMBIA, 1875-1990

INTRODUCTION

In British Columbia the administration of Native peoples has undergone tremendous change since the first offices of Indian Affairs were opened in 1872. The creation and abolition of superintendencies, followed by the establishment and subsequent amalgamation or abolition of a variety of agency offices, succeeded by the development of district offices which have themselves been closed, are evidence of the Department of Indian Affairs' on-going struggle to find the most effective means of organizing the many responsibilities it has to Native peoples in British Columbia. These changes in administrative structure, combined with band name changes, and the merger and disappearance of some bands over time, present a challenge to researchers interested in using records relating to Indian Affairs.

Within Record Group 10 (hereafter RG 10) at the National Archives of Canada, records of the Department of Indian Affairs maintain the Departmental order of documents and their associated file numbers. Files are organized according to administrative office rather than by band name because that is the system of classification maintained by the Department of Indian Affairs and its predecessor agencies. Researchers must therefore identify the agency or district office which had administrative responsibility for a particular band at a given time, in order to make effective use of the finding aids in RG 10.

This guide has been prepared in an effort to simplify the identification of Native bands within Agency and District offices in British Columbia from 1875 to 1990. A brief chronology of Indian Affairs administration in British Columbia is provided at the beginning of the Guide, with alphabetical indices to Band names and Agency and District office names supplied at the end. Each entry in the Guide consists of the following components:

1. NAME of the Agency or District Office;
2. LOCATION: the city or town in which the Agent's office was located;
3. ORIGIN: information on whether the office was created by Order-in-Council, as part of an amalgamation or a division of another office;
4. DATES OF JURISDICTION: dates during which the office was in existence;

5. AGENTS: names of Agents responsible for the office. The heading reads "Agents" although the title of the responsible official would have changed to Superintendent in 1948 and to District Manager/ Supervisor by 1971;
6. AMALGAMATIONS AND DIVISIONS: of the Agency or District;
7. VARIANTS: variations on the name, or spelling of the name, of the office;
8. RESPONSIBLE FOR: the bands administered by the Agency or District office. To the right of the "band name" are notations indicating the date that the band was moved to the Agency or District and the originating office, plus the name of the Agency or District which had subsequent responsibility for the band.

The Guide may be used to trace a band through the various offices which may have been responsible for it over time, as well as to identify the bands which were administered by a particular Agency or District office during the office's existence. In the case of many bands there were multiple spellings and name variations over time; a maximum of three variations is provided in the footnote. When a band officially requested and received a band name change, that change and the new name are noted in the entry for the Agency or District administering the band at the time of the change which may not correspond to the first listing of the band in the Guide.

Information pertaining to the disappearance of bands is included in the footnotes, often with a reference to "Census" sources. These notations refer to the information in the "Census Return" column of the Department of Indian Affairs' Annual Reports.

For purposes of clarity, the notation (1st) and (2nd) have been indicated in front of the agency name for both the Kamloops and the Okanagan Agencies. In both cases, the original office was in existence for several years and then closed completely only to be re-opened later under the identical name but not necessarily with responsibility for the same bands.

As a final note, it should be stated that this Guide is not definitive; changes to the Departmental structure which occurred after 1990 have not been accounted for, and it has not been possible to satisfactorily trace the movements of all bands over the one hundred and fifty years proposed by the title.

CHRONOLOGY OF INDIAN AFFAIRS ADMINISTRATION

IN BRITISH COLUMBIA, 1875-1990

1872: I.W. Powell appointed Superintendent of Indian Affairs for British Columbia; office situated in Victoria

1873: A Board of Indian Commissioners established to administer Indian matters in British Columbia, under direction of the Superintendent General of Indian Affairs

1875: By Order-in-Council of 15 December, British Columbia divided into the Victoria Superintendency under I.W. Powell (serving Vancouver Island and the North West Coast), and the Fraser Superintendency under James Lenihan (serving the Lower Mainland area)

1880: Two-Superintendency structure abolished

1881: Six Indian Agencies opened in the Province:

Cowichan Agency
Fraser River Agency
Kamloops Agency
Kwawkewlth Agency
Okanagan Agency
West Coast Agency

In 1880 I.W. Powell became the Indian Superintendent for British Columbia in Victoria and was, after 1881, sole Visiting Superintendent

1889: A.W. Vowell replaced I.W. Powell

1910: Indian Superintendent's office in Victoria closed and the position abolished, with Agents directed to conduct business through headquarters in Ottawa; British Columbia divided into three Inspectorates, each headed by an Inspector of Indian Agencies:

- Northern Inspectorate, based in Vancouver
- Southwestern Inspectorate, based in Victoria
- Southeastern Inspectorate, based in Vernon

1917: Southwestern Inspectorate abolished and its Inspector, W.E. Ditchburn, appointed Chief Inspector for B.C.

1918: Northern Inspectorate abolished

1923: Position of Indian Commissioner for British Columbia established with W.E. Ditchburn appointed Commissioner

1932: Following death of W.E. Ditchburn, position of Indian Commissioner for British Columbia left vacant

1935: Position of Indian Commissioner for British Columbia abolished, only to be re-established in 1936

1948: Region of British Columbia created; Indian Affairs in the Province continued to be headed by the Indian Commissioner for British Columbia. Indian Agents re-named "Indian Superintendents" and the Inspector of Indian Agencies for the Southeastern Inspectorate reclassified Regional Supervisor of Indian Agencies

1966: B.C. Region amalgamated with the Yukon Region to create the B.C.-Yukon Region, with headquarters at Vancouver

1967: Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development began the process of amalgamating Indian Agencies in British Columbia to create larger Indian Districts

1970: B.C.-Yukon Region separated into the B.C. Region and the Yukon Region
